Low Tide

Darren Black

San Antonio Review

Published on: Dec 11, 2022

URL: https://www.sareview.org/pub/d65z0w3i

License: Creative Commons Attribution-NonCommercial-NoDerivatives 4.0 International License (CC-BY-NC-ND 4.0) low tide, the sea turns out its pockets oysters snatched up by the urchin birds

Darren Black lives on Massachusetts's north shore and has served on the committee of the Boston Poetry Marathon. His first published poem appeared in the fall 2019 issue of the Muddy River Poetry Review. His recent poems explore disability status, accessibility, and his own experiences living with blindness.